When traveling internationally can I still use my Discover Debit Card?

Although Discover debit card is accepted at many retail locations throughout the US and abroad, we, along with many travel experts, highly recommend using cash, a prepaid card or a credit card to make purchases. This will help minimize any fraud exposure and acceptance issues at the point-of-sale. Debit cards can be an easy way to access cash while traveling abroad, but we recommend that you take multiple payment options with you to ensure you do not have any interruptions while traveling. It is a good idea to make sure you take $300 cash with you.

We highly recommend that you carry an alternate source of payment, i.e.: credit card:

Order foreign currency in advance. Visit our website, brattbank.com and search "Foreign Currency" for more information, or stop by one of our office locations.

What if the merchant says that they do not accept Discover Debit?

The merchant may not be aware that they can accept your card, therefore ask the merchant to try it. Still you may want to have another form of payment to ensure you are covered.

ATMs/Cash: When looking for an ATM in the US or a foreign country, make sure you only use Bank owned ATM machines that accept the type of card you are carrying. Look at the back of your card to see available networks. In the US, look for: Cirrus, NYCE, Discover/PULSE, and Diner's Club. In a foreign country, look for: Discover/PULSE and Diner's Club. You may find two different machines that accept different cards, side-by-side. An important side note: some countries, (i.e. France) only allow ATM WDs from a checking account.

- ) Daily transaction limits: Your card has established daily transaction limits. Be sure to speak with us to ensure card limits will be sufficient for you while you while traveling.
$1,000 per day | $500 ATM per day
